GMA to make new pitch for constitutional changes

By Tj Burgonio and Leila B. Salaverria

THE LAST WORD OF PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO will be on Charter change.

Apparently saving the "best" for last, the President has chosen to close her ostensibly final State of the Nation Address (Sona) before Congress tomorrow with a fresh pitch for amending the 1987 Constitution.

Inquirer Read-Along spawns book-swap

By Kate V. Pedroso and Schatzi Quodala
Inquirer Research

A BOOK-SWAPPING PROGRAM launched yesterday as a spinoff of the Inquirer Read-Along program attracted the biggest crowd yet for a regular reading session at the Philippine Daily Inquirer offices on Chino Roces Avenue in Makati City.

"Books4Books" or B4B was conceptualized as a result of separate focus group discussions held last year with Read-Along participants and their parents. One of the findings in the discussions was that while some kids had developed a love of reading, they did not have access to storybooks.

Passion for reading

"The B4B is one way to highlight the Read-Along in engaging children to be passionate about reading by making it more accessible. We're happy the office now has more room to accommodate this program. I'm hopeful that because of this, the love and passion for reading will get more encouragement," said Inquirer president Alexandra Prieto-Romualdez, who led the launch after the readings by new and veteran storytellers.

In the audience of about 200 children were students from Makati public elementary schools F. Benitez, La Paz and Rafael Palma. The Makati Sporting Association, [illegible] Foundation and Child Hope Asia Philippines also brought their wards with them.

"With B4B, you can own just one book but have access to more than 700 books in our Inquirer Children's Library," said Minerva Generalao, Research Department head and Inquirer Read-Along project coordinator. "We also aim to teach kids how to use a library," she added.

Addressing the children, Romualdez said: "I'm happy you were able to make it today. I hope you enjoy yourselves. Listen well and remember that reading is very important. We can all improve our lives by reading."

Returning Read-Along storyteller Ann Abacan, principal of Sophia School in Meycauayan, Bulacan, kicked off the session with Rebecca Añonuevo's "The Sky Rooster." Her son, 9-year-old Kahlil, read "Ang [illegible]" by [illegible], while two other Sophia School students, [illegible] Luther Rodriguez and Erika Marial Rivera, acted out the story in the background.

[illegible] members of the Ateneo de Manila High School Debate [illegible], led by their captain Henry Fernando and moderator [illegible], capped the session with their reading of "[illegible]."

Ateneo debaters Clyde Marcelo, Paolo Magalso and Stanley Magno narrated the story, while Aaron Sena, Miguel Sanchez, Dan Bernal and Basilio Claudio acted out the parts of the characters.

Funny, interactive

[illegible], who wore "[illegible]" with his wife Michelle, answered questions after the event. "It was fun watching the story come to life. The students did a good job. Their performance was funny and interactive—[illegible] the way my wife and I imagined it to be," he said.

The Ateneo debaters also turned over more than 100 books as a donation to the Children's Library, while regular Read-Along attendee, 10-year-old Kaiser Delcano, turned over six titles.

"Ateneo is celebrating its sesquicentennial with the theme of nation-building. Volunteering for the Read-Along is a way to contribute to building a nation of readers and leaders," [illegible] said.

Importance

"As debaters, we know the importance of reading. Before we debate, we should be aware of what's going on. So we have to do a lot of research and reading. Our wish is to somehow influence others to realize the importance of reading," Fernando said.

Added Marcelo: "I was nervous at first but because the children were energetic and warm, I became more at home. It was very fulfilling. I would like to be a storyteller again, given the chance."

Eleven-year-old Alvin Pagsanjan has been to the Read-Along several times, but yesterday's session was different as he was chosen to act out the role of [illegible], the Sky Rooster. "I have attended the session 10 times, but now I performed in front of the other kids. It was very enjoyable."

Ten-year-old Eva Tablada said her favorite story was that of Benito. "From the story, I learned you don't have to [illegible] to be productive," she said.

Benito was also the favorite of 9-year-old Charlene Repollo, who came to the session for the first time with mom Christy. "I liked the story because the storytellers were funny," said Charlene.

Favorite storytellers

Jessher Cruz, an 11-year-old first-timer, said his favorite storyteller was Kahlil Abacan. For Jonathan [illegible], Brian Felice and Jan Michael Morgado, on the other hand, Benito's story was their choice.

"It was fun," said Jonathan, 9. "I learned how to not be ashamed of what I have," Brian, also 9, added. Jan Michael, 8, said he loved Benito "because his teeth are like mine."

Rowena Baldeo, a teacher from F. Benitez, said her students' attendance at the Read-Along was timely because they just started a similar program in school. "I'm happy because the kids seemed to be very active and participative," she said.

Makati Sporting Association coordinator Ana Marie Teo said the children loved the readers' costumes. "The kids still talked about the costumes after the session was over," she said. "I still think it's a good idea that children tell stories to other children. That way, they understand the stories better."

Yesterday's session, hosted by [illegible] editor in chief Chito de la Vega, Junior Inquirer writer Ruth Navarra and Sophia School sixth grader Michelle [illegible], was held in cooperation with [illegible] and [illegible] for [illegible] Corp. Books from [illegible] Publishing were given away to the children.

The Inquirer Children's Library collection has grown with donations from commercial publishing houses and private persons. Among the donors are Adarna House, [illegible] Publishing, National Book Store Foundation, [illegible] of the [illegible] Book Project, [illegible] and [illegible], [illegible], Henry Fernando and the Ateneo Debaters.

About 50 children from F. Benitez also registered as the first batch of B4B participants after the session.

The next Read-Along session will be on Aug. 8, 10 a.m., at the Inquirer main office in Makati City. Interested participants may call [illegible] at [illegible] loc. [illegible]. For the B4B program, please bring two 1x1 ID photos.

RP student wins bronze in math tilt

By Jerry E. Esplanada

A JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL STUDENT in Manila won for the Philippines a bronze medal in the 50th International Mathematical Olympiad (IMO) held on July 10-22 in Bremen, Germany.

Carmela Antoinette Lao, of St. Jude Catholic School, received the lone medal for the Philippines in the contest where 565 high school students from 104 countries took part.

The other members of the Philippine team were Carlo Francisco Adajar of PAREF Southridge in Alabang, Muntinlupa City, and Earl John Chua and Jonathan Wong of Grace Christian College in Quezon City.

The three, along with Lao, were selected from over 2,000 high school students nationwide who competed in the 2009 Philippine Mathematical Olympiad.

The four participants were joined by team leader Dr. [illegible], associate professor at the Ateneo de Manila University Mathematics Department, and Deputy Team Leader Dr. Julius Basilla, assistant professor at the Institute for Mathematics of the University of the Philippines in Diliman.

Their pre-IMO training and the trip to Germany were sponsored by the Science Education Institute of the Department of Science and Technology, in cooperation with the Mathematics Society of the Philippines, headed by Dr. Fidel Nemenzo of the University of the Philippines.

First female participant to win

China topped the list of winners with six gold medals, followed by Japan, Russia, South Korea, North Korea and the United States. Thailand, which placed seventh, was the only Southeast Asian nation to make the Top 10 in the medal tally. Lao's win placed the country No. [illegible] overall in the tally.

In the individual contest, Dongyi Wei of China and Makoto Soejima of Japan were joint first-placers after garnering perfect scores.

According to Lao's mother, Carol, her daughter was also the first female Philippine entry to receive a medal in the history of IMO. Last year, Diego Miguel [illegible] of Ateneo de Manila High School won a bronze medal for the country.

In an e-mail to the Inquirer, Lao said she was thankful to "God for His grace and mercy," as well as her parents "for their unconditional love and support."

Support of coaches, mentors

She also cited the support of her coaches and mentors at Mathematics Trainers' Guild-Philippines, headed by Dr. Simon Chua, who helped her and the rest of the Philippine team prepare for the tough qualification requirements of the IMO.

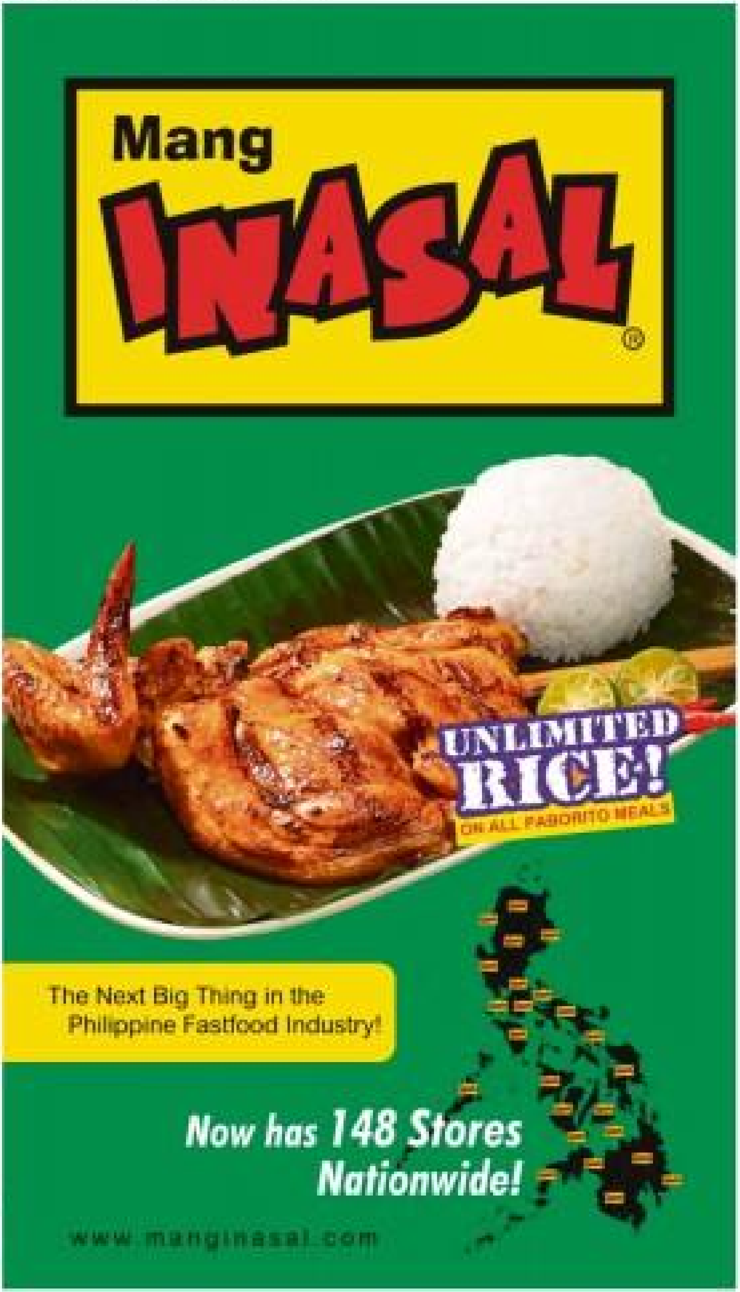

IMO 2009 is supported by the German Federal Ministry for Education and Research and the Bremen Senator for Education and Science, in cooperation with Jacobs University.

It was organized by a private organization called "Education & Gifted Talent" (Bildung & Begabung), the implementing arm of the Association of German Benefactors for Sciences (Stifterverband für die Deutsche Wissenschaft), and sponsored by the steel company [illegible] Group and the Business Technology Consulting Group. *With Cynthia D. DPWH SONA PROJECTS UPDATE

DPWH SONA PROJECTS: Kalsada ng Kinabukasan

Our focus in the last few years has been the completion of 23 SONA Projects, as well as other Pump-priming Priority Projects.

The Bohol Circumferential Road was completed in 2006, at a cost of P2.2B. In 2007, the Diosdado Macapagal Bridge in Butuan was finished, the steel suspension bridge is the first of its kind in Mindanao. In August 2009, the Hawilian-Salug-Sinakungan Road, Esperanza, Agusan del Sur project was completed.

With proper planning and the cooperation of our partners as well as our stakeholders in the areas where our projects are being built, we have achieved a 54% completion rate at the present time, and are targeting an 84% accomplishment rate by year-end. We are well on our way to fulfilling the commitment by 2010, to lead the way into the future for our citizens across the land.

PUBLIC WORKS AT WORK

Our lead role as builders of the country's infrastructure network has been a continuing commitment since 1898. A responsibility that has enabled the emergence of more communities, new opportunities and greater growth through the years. From dirt roads and makeshift bridges in 1898, we are proud to have collectively built 29,368.7 kilometers of roads and 314,453 lineal meters of bridges across our 7,101 islands over the last 111 years.

Displaced people cry: 'We want to go home'

By Ryan D. Rosauro
Cotabato City

"WE WANT TO GO HOME now!"

The collective cry came from people displaced by fighting between government and Moro rebel forces in a statement dubbed "State of the Evacuees' Address" (Sona) and read during a forum at the Notre Dame University in Cotabato City on Thursday.

The "Sona," they hoped, would be a "collective input" to President Macapagal-Arroyo's State of the Nation Address (Sona) on Monday, her last before she steps down from power next year.

Some 250,000 people are still staying in cramped evacuation centers that dot central Mindanao and prevented from returning to their villages because of continued insecurity.

"We pray to Allah to help us resume our interrupted lives," implored the Sona, read by [illegible] in Maguindanao and by [illegible] parish in Filipino.

Representatives of civil society groups, evacuees and students attended the forum.

Eleven months ago, it said, the people fled their homes and villages for fear of getting caught in the crossfire of renewed hostilities between the government and the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF).

Ramadan at home

"Please do not allow us to spend another Ramadan in the evacuation centers," it said. Ramadan, the Muslim holy month of fasting, will start on Aug. 21 or 22, and the evacuees wanted a "safe, organized and permanent return to our homes" in time for its observance.

[illegible]

War wounds

[illegible]

them are no longer in school. We fear the children will learn nothing but evacuation, war and hopelessness," it stated.

Unsafe camps

The evacuees pointed out that life in the evacuation centers was not only economically hard but also unsafe.

They cited the case of three evacuees—[illegible]—who suddenly disappeared on May 7.

[illegible] took issue of the indiscriminate mortar shelling on June 13 that badly injured a 6-year-old child.

To drum up their call for their safe return home, the evacuees staged "[illegible]," like what they did six years ago.

WOMEN weep openly in Datu Odin Sinsuat, Maguindanao, as they join other displaced persons in a rally for war to stop in their communities for them to return home.

Promoting wireless excellence and Filipino values

[illegible]

If a picture paints a thousand words, then a TV commercial or a print ad can convey a lot more especially if it's crafted with social impact in mind. That is what the Tambuli Awards is all about – responsible communication that promotes societal values as much as profitable marketing.

THIS SAME PHILOSOPHY GUIDES SMART Communications, Inc. when it launches communication campaigns designed not only to promote its services, but Filipino values as well. Small wonder that the country's leading wireless service provider bagged three awards during the Tambuli Awards 2009.

For creating a positive influence on the Filipino mindset, three of SMART's recent advertising campaigns were recognized. These awards reaffirm the company's commitment to practicing accountable marketing communications that uphold the ideals of excellence, nobility of purpose, and social responsibility.

Espousing values has always been a corporate practice in SMART and other companies run by PLDT and SMART Chairman Manuel V. Pangilinan who has always believed that success is founded on strong values.

"When it comes to success, there are no secrets, no magic, no mystery. Success springs from old-fashioned values or values as basic as being honest and truthful, especially with yourself. Values as essential as working hard, playing fair, and seeking no harm on others," he once told a group of graduates during commencement exercises in a Mindanao university.

Promoting values in their communication campaigns and services is SMART's way of giving back to the community. Somehow, it explains why SMART has been the leader in the wireless business.

"Being recognized with the Tambuli Awards is a great honor for SMART and a big motivation for us to continue imparting Filipino values and virtues in the same breath that we promote our services," said SMART Wireless Consumer Division Head [illegible].

He expressed elation over the fact that SMART was the only telecommunication company that made it to the final round of Tambuli Awards 2009, a feat he considers very important considering that it is the only one in Asia that recognizes both profitability and social impact in integrated marketing communications.

"These values that we promote are the same values that SMART's corporate culture stands on. But we take necessary steps in propagating what we believe is for the common good of society," he added.

SMART Buddy's "Me on Me" advertisement, which stresses the empowerment of subscribers towards self-expression, and SMART Group's "Bring Me Along" ad, which illustrates the value of communication to friends and loved ones through innovative services, each won a bronze in the Best Established Service Brand category.

SMART Bro's Prepaid advertisement, which underscores the value of providing broadband for everyone through high-speed, affordable and portable broadband connection, also picked up a bronze in the Best Innovative and Integrated Media category.

These SMART entries were recognized not only for their marketing and creative excellence but also for enhancing the company's profitability while contributing to the betterment of Philippine society.

"We are aware of media's power in influencing people and so we maximize every opportunity in our marketing communications to help reinforce Filipino attributes such as respect, [illegible], perseverance and [illegible]," said SMART Marketing Group Head Annie P. Naval.

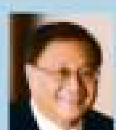

She noted that SMART takes utmost care in crafting its messages and their impact on the audience as media materials such as commercials and ads play a significant role in forming values among Filipinos who are bombarded with loads of marketing information every day.

Originally known as the Integrated Marketing Communications Effectiveness Awards (IMCEA) when it was launched four years ago, the Tambuli Awards – as it is called now – has broadened its reach this year to include companies within the Asian region.

Tambuli Awards is organized by the University of Asia and the Pacific (UA&P), in partnership with the Marketing and Opinion Research Society of the Philippines and BusinessWorld.

Entries are judged based on business results and qualitative results of how the marketing communications campaigns promote virtues and values for the uplift of the community.

For SMART, the Tambuli recognition is more than enough impetus for the company to continue bringing excellent and responsive wireless services to Filipinos while delivering messages that build values not only for itself and the market but for Philippine society as well.

"When it comes to success, there are no secrets, no magic, no mystery. Success springs from old-fashioned values or values as basic as being honest and truthful, especially with yourself. Values as essential as working hard, playing fair, and seeking no harm on others."

End of an era

Philamlife loses an institution, gains a stalwart in British expat

Under Cuisia's watch, Philamlife cemented its leading position in the local insurance industry

JOSE CUISIA JR.

By Doris C. Dumlao

THE COUNTRY'S LARGEST AND MOST profitable insurance company Philippine American Life and General Insurance Co. (Philamlife) marks the end of an era when its long-time president and chief executive officer Jose Cuisia Jr. retires on Aug. 1.

Trevor Bull, a British expatriate and insurance veteran, who used to be managing director of Tata AIG Life Insurance Co. in India, will succeed Cuisia as head of the local crown jewel of the American International Group.

But Philamlife continues to value Cuisia's 16-year experience and contributions, and will keep him on the board as vice chair.

Cuisia is bowing out of day-to-day operations with much commendation. Under his watch, Philamlife cemented its leading position in the local insurance industry and more than doubled its consolidated resources.

Cuisia also engineered the company's diversification thrust to include mutual funds, bancassurance and property management.

He also kept the local house in order, while its parent AIG almost went belly up late last year at the height of the US subprime crisis. AIG have had to seek a lifeline from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

At that time, Cuisia faced one of the most challenging situations of his long career when Philamlife was put up for sale.

Aborted

The sale of Philamlife was later aborted, and the unit was instead folded into AIG's Asian unit, AIA Group.

"I would like to extend my gratitude to Joey for building a robust business infrastructure that will enable a smooth integration of Philamlife into the AIA Group," said AIA Group CEO Mark Wilson.

Under his leadership, Philamlife received six consecutive Platinum Trusted Brand awards from Reader's Digest Asia (2004-2009), making it the first and only financial institution in the Philippines to receive such a distinction.

Although Bull may have to fill such exceptionally large shoes, he is not without distinction of his own.

Bull has over 30 years of experience as a life insurance professional, having held various senior management positions across Europe, Japan and Korea, bringing with him extensive knowledge and experience in insurance products and distribution channels. As chief of the unit in India, this venture became one of the fastest growing life insurers in this large emerging market.

Scrutiny

"Trevor's successful track record in the highly competitive life insurance markets of India and Korea makes him uniquely suitable for this leadership role. I have every confidence that he will lead the management team to further accelerate Philamlife's growth and strengthen its leadership in the Philippines," Wilson said.

Unlike CEOs of most other local corporations, those of Philamlife had enjoyed long tenures. It only means that each successor has undergone the closest scrutiny passing very high qualification benchmarks.

Throughout its 62-year history, Philamlife has had only four presidents. Prior to Cuisia (1993-2009), the local insurance giant was headed by Earl Carroll (1947-1969), Cesar Zalamea (1969-1983) and Rodrigo delos Reyes (1983-1993).

Prior to his stint at Philamlife, Cuisia served the government as Central Bank governor and head of state-owned pension fund Social Security System.

He was a recipient of the Management Man of the Year for 2007, an award bestowed by the Management Association of TESSA!

Tessa Prieto-Valdes

THE BODY IS A HIGHLY complex, multi-functioning living machine. It can endure extreme physical activities with proper training and nutrition. It also needs to regenerate, re-energize and recover from time to time.

As the Cobra Energy Drink Ironman 70.3 Philippines in Camarines Sur draws closer and closer, my semi-rigid training sessions with Ironman champ Ani de Leon, swim coach Gary Concepcion and bike coach brother-in-law Bobby Valdes are getting tougher and tougher.

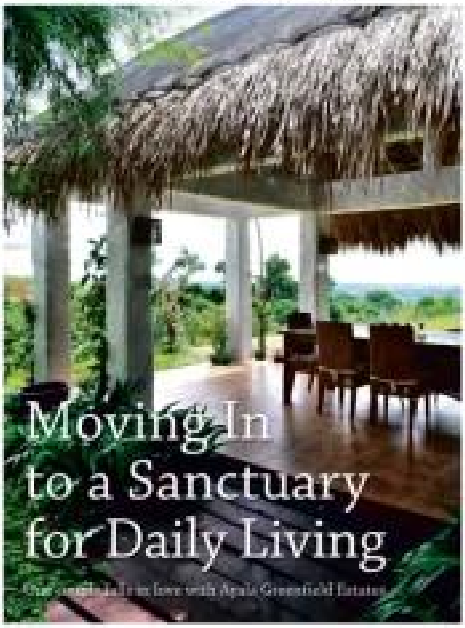

So I did the logical thing to do: I took a training break.

I may not be as strong as the members of the Polo Tri Team, but I am certainly the most accessorized

MIDLIFE E1

Moving In to a Sanctuary for Daily Living

"It feels like we have a living painting surrounding our house, every single day. The place allows us to just spend time and commune with nature together. It's really more of an emotional investment for us as a couple. Our home here is our very own sanctuary."

For businesswoman Cristina Leon-Tu and her lawyer husband who both lived their entire single lives in the city, moving out of the metro to Ayala Greenfield Estates, the 350-hectare Ayala Land Premier residential community in Calamba, Laguna, seemed like a bold decision to make.

"We recently got married and we've been looking for properties in the South where we can settle down and build a family. When our friend invited us over to Ayala Greenfield Estates to check the place, we thought it would be too far," says Cristina.

"We would visit our friend every now and then. We came once a month, then it became twice a month," reminisces Cristina. "And then we realized that of all the communities we've been to, Ayala Greenfield Estates was just incomparable. The more we visited the area, the more we fell in love with it. And it really is just 30 minutes from Alabang. That's when we finally decided to live here."

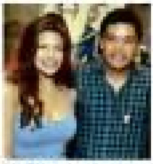

With their Asian contemporary house now standing on the adjacent lots the couple has acquired, the two have never been happier. Aside from the natural beauty surrounding the community, its full range of village amenities, the excellent security and most of all, the friendly neighbors.

Cristina loves how close the community is to important establishments. "I find everything accessible. Actually, we still do most of our errands in Alabang. It only takes 30 minutes for my husband to get to his work every day."

But most importantly, what drew the couple to the residential subdivision was the change of life it provided them.

"When my husband and I were single, we were both very, very busy," muses Cristina. "Now, we're more relaxed and we have more time for ourselves. We love seeing Laguna de Bay from our bedroom and living area. It feels like we have a living painting surrounding our house, every single day. The place allows us to just spend time and commune with nature together. It's really more of an emotional investment for us as a couple. Our home here is our very own sanctuary."

cooking trip to Thailand. We took one of several packaged offered for touring the Grand Kingdom of Siam on www.cycle-thailand.com or www.thailandways.com.

Our first stop was Chiang Mai, the beloved northern city of the Thais, and we headed straight to the Panhaluka Wellness Spa Resort. An Indian doctor of alternative medicine, Jasdeil Bahal, gives visitors an aura check before they undergo any therapy.

With my aura color of orange and yellow, the doctor told me I should "go well cheerfully" or at least finish the race with a positive attitude. That might be personally challenged, but I'm sure the Ironman will be an even greater test.

I checked www.ironman70.3phil.com and there are only two female entrants in my age bracket, with only five more days until the registration deadline. So even if I just crawl to the finish within the time limit, I might get a medal!

Three legs

One of the toughest endurance sports, the triathlon has three legs—swim, bike and run. I am confident of my swim and run, but my biking skills are more appropriate for going around the village with my kids. Sonja Lennerfeld of Bike Team Sydney is assembling a "secret weapon" for me. I hope it has an engine!

The brains behind Ironman 70.3 are Alaska Milk CEO Fred Uytengsu and Camsur Governor LRay Villafuerte. Together, they are bringing sports enthusiasts the country as several international competitors are flying in just for the event. Fred got into it to achieve his "dealing with midlife illness," and is thrilled to be bringing the prestigious Ironman event to local shores.

Midlife fitness is something we can all relate to, but even better is midlife shopping! Triathlon is an opportunity to get into Oakley shades, Timex watches, Speedo fast-track suits and Nike gear—and that's just for starters!

LESSONS FROM MYRNA

Embracing life after loss

Myrna Panlilio Borromeo (1942-2009) was a civic worker and beauty queen

By Mitzi Borromeo
Contributor

As I was sorting out and cleaning up Mom's things, I found, stuck in the corner of her dresser mirror, a piece of paper on which she had scribbled the following words:

"The memory of my loved one is a part of my life forever. So maybe the experience of loss not only helps clarify what is important to us, but also helps us know where we are and the direction in which we want to go."

These are surely words she turned to draw strength from, in coping with the most painful experience of her life, the loss of a daughter, my older sister Tricia.

With each and every experience of loss, we die a little. But there is life after loss. The memory resulting from the loss of a loved one makes us realize our mortality, waking us up to a better life.

As we come to terms with our grief and make sense of all that has happened, I'd like to think the scribbled words that were one of Mom's daily reminders are now her message to all who loved her.

May they wake us all up to a new life, seeing it with fresh and grateful eyes.

My family and I would like to thank everyone—you know who you are—who went out of their way to aid, for kind words and generous deeds to help ease the pain of our loss.

My brother BJ and L. Sanson (BJ's daughter), Mom's sisters and brother Maloy Panlilio

Lagerfeld tells Valentino, "You and I are the only true geniuses. The others just make rags!"

"The September Issue" is one of the most-awaited movies among fashionistas and those who work in magazine publications. It is a documentary on the making of Vogue's advertising-heavy September issue and the relationship between the editor who wears Prada, Anna Wintour, and Vogue's equally powerful but not often seen creative director, Grace Coddington.

Must-have cologne

That should be Maison Eau de Pamplemousse Rose. On a recent trip to New York, I chanced upon two new colognes by Hermes (opening in Manila by the end of the year). These colognes are part of a cloudstream: the classic Eau d'Orange Verte, which is celebrating its 30th year; the new Eau de Pamplemousse Rose and Eau de Gentiane Blanche.

The latter smells clean but doesn't appeal to me much. The Pamplemousse, however, is absolutely wonderful.

I am one person who loves scents, and this one ranks high on my list. The smell is fresh, bright, citrusy—a mixture of pamplemousse, orange and vetiver. No scent has made me excited in a long time. And this one does just that!

coming to Manila to do food styling seminars. Her seminar this time was produced by Ingenius through Lifestyle food consultant and cookbook author Nancy Reyes Chikiamco.

The crowd—a good mix of entrepreneurs, chefs, restaurateurs, hoteliers, foodies, homemakers, artists and stylists—learned how to have a food styling career, how to increase their visual awareness and standard. Custer style a peanut butter spread for a photograph (it's an industry), discuss about a restaurant versus a home consumer-plated dish, compare a good salad dish with a bad one, or even style potato chips.

It must be the times—it's apparent that more and more Filipinos are getting drawn to the food business or culinary careers.

Custer is one of America's foremost food stylists who has worked with culinary icons like Julia Child and lately, with Martha Stewart.

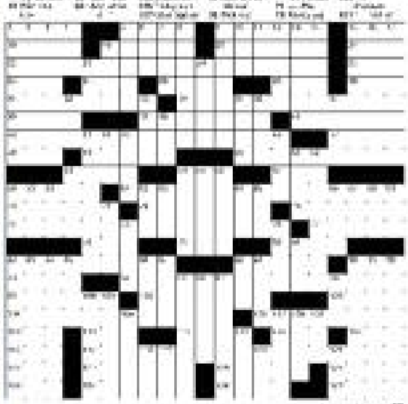

Over lunch at the buffet of all buffets at Sofitel's Spiral, Custer was obviously impressed with

Bowling is family bonding time

SM NORTH Edsa Bowling Center

FOR MANY FAMILIES, bowling means healthy competition and joyful bonding time.

A fine venue for bowling enthusiasts is the SM Bowling Center in North Edsa, which was designed by Architects RAF from Australia.

The modern North Edsa branch is child-friendly as well, offering bumper lanes which block off the gutters, ensuring kids also a chance at knocking down pins at every single release. This bumper bowling system builds up a child's confidence and guarantees enjoyment so parents need not worry about their kids who are playing for the first time.

POOL games on sleek billiard tables

"SM Bowling Center is changing the face, look and feel of bowling in the country today. Gone are the stodgy fiberglass gray seats and unhygienic canteens. In its place, you find cozy but luxuriously cushioned lounge seating that one usually finds in hip and urban music clubs," explains [illegible], VP for SM Leisure.

NOT quite the longest conga line, but these Calle Ocho revelers put up a good show just the same.

Havana is blazing, alive—in Miami's Calle Ocho

The hub of Cuban opposition to Fidel Castro holds another distinction—the world record for longest conga line

Text and photos by Alex Y. Vergara

THE FIRST IMPULSE OF FIRST-TIME visitors to Miami, Florida, is to head for South Beach and stroll down scenic Ocean Drive and its mile-long stretch of art-deco buildings, including the late Gianni Versace's former seaside home.

But Miami, one of America's most racially diverse cities, offers other glimpses of reality far removed from the night glamour and glitz of South Beach.

A 15-minute drive away from South Beach is Calle Ocho, literally meaning 8th Street, the heart of Little Havana. This is where Miami's sizable Cuban community gravitates and share with the rest of the world bits and pieces of Cuba's culture and history, particularly its passionate opposition to half a century of Fidel Castro's communist rule.

"Every day is a good day to visit Calle Ocho," says a second-generation Cuban-American, owner of one several stores along the strip. He's referring to the street's festive atmosphere and, barring hurricanes, Miami's year-round sunny weather.
